Malcolm, Finlay and Scott, Michael, James asserts that there are two affirmations of religion. And, Belief in God satisfies these existential needs.

The essay was a page bestseller, which, most commentators agree, was unfair. If the evidence were compelling, or even strongly supportive of, say, hypothesis A and you recognized this, it may be that you would find only A alive. Belief is catching, as associating and imitating the faithful is an effective way of self-inducing the beliefs of the faithful. Is belief in God when faced with a lack of evidence illegitimate and improper? objection is interesting since it is in one sense true. The acceptance of theistic hope provides reason to act as if theism were true, not because one believes that it is true, but because one hopes that it is.
